Where's the evidence?

Building the business case for employee empowerment

The way we organise our workplaces will play a vital role in the future of the European economy and its ability to compete. A considerable body of evidence supports the proposition that workplace innovation is related in a positive and significant way to improvements in organisational performance on the one hand, and in employee well-being and engagement on the other.

Workplace innovation is fuelled by open dialogue, knowledge sharing, experimentation and learning in which diverse stakeholders (who may include employees, trade unions, managers and customers) are given a voice in the creation of new and more participative ways of working.

Successful and sustainable organisations create empowering workplace environments which enable employees at all levels to use their knowledge, competences and creativity to the full. Such workplaces are likely to include empowering job design; self-organised teamworking; structured opportunities for reflection, learning and improvement; high involvement innovation practices; the encouragement of entrepreneurial behaviour at all levels of the organisation; and employee representation in strategic decision-making.

Research and case study evidence alike demonstrate that these workplace practices are essential if employers are to secure a full return on their investments in training and technology through improvements in performance, innovation and employee engagement.

Transformational Leadership at Speedo

A UK WON Network Event - Nottingham: 16th January 2014

Leaders who succeed in transforming companies understand the need to engage the ideas, experience and commitment of all their people.

This interactive workshop will include:

- Speedo's experience of developing transformational leaders;
- emerging thinking and practice in leadership and engagement;
- an exchange of experience between participants.

The event will also include a highly enjoyable forum theatre performance to enable participants to share ideas and experiences of leadership and engagement (<http://www.workplaceinnovation.eu/interactive-theatre>).

Places are strictly limited – book now!
